The present invention, in connection with which the present patent application is being prosecuted, is directed toward a bulkhead structure for incorporation within refrigerated cargo containers wherein the bulkhead structure comprises structural components which effectively permit the height and width dimensions of the bulkhead structure to be expanded or contracted so as to effectively alter or adjust the height and width dimensions of the bulkhead structure in order to correspond to the internal height and width dimensions of the refrigerated cargo container. In this manner, the bulkhead structure effectively comprises universal bulkhead structure which can be disposed in a properly sealed manner internally within any refrigerated cargo container regardless of the internal height and width dimensions of the refrigerated cargo container. Accordingly, the necessity of manufacturing or fabricating a multitude of bulkhead structures, each manufactured or fabricated according to predetermined specifications characteristic of individual refrigerated cargo containers, is obviated and eliminated.
